Managing complex change requires FIVE COMPONENTS.

The above model illustrating the components necessary to bring about and manage complex change has applications to community coalitions.

If you have skills, incentives, resources and an action plan but you don’t have a vision — that guiding force behind what you’re trying to do — you will not end up with change. You will end up with confusion because you won’t have that guiding force to refer back to during the process.

If you have a vision, incentives, resources and an action plan, but leave out the skills necessary (i.e. communication, public speaking, political or advocacy) to effect the change you seek, you will be left with anxiety among your coalition members. If you have people who are unprepared to do the work, it doesn't matter if they have a great vision.

If you have the vision, skills, resources and action plan, but leave out the incentives — the types of things (rewards, recognition, celebrations) that keep key community stakeholders involved — you may have change, but it will be more gradual. It may take years to years to accomplish what you could have done in a shorter period of time.

If you have the vision, skills, incentives and action plan, but leave out the resources (money, time, equipment), you will end up with a lot of frustration because you’ve got a plan, and you know how to accomplish it, but you don’t have the resources to get the job done.

If you have the vision, skills, incentive and resources, but no action plan — a plan broken down into steps that people can take and accomplish in small bits — you will end up with a lot of false starts. The members may take off in a certain direction, only to realize that an important step was skipped, forcing them to stop their progress and go back and take care of it.

---

Source: The Managing Complex Change model was copyrighted by Dr. Mary Lippitt, founder and president of Enterprise Management, Ltd., in 1987.